

“Electronic” fine without notice under the windshield wiper

In some cities, fines are issued “remotely”, with digital tools and without the traditional notice on the windshield. This is a possibility that has been allowed for some years for cases such as the ascertainment of a violation in the absence of the offender.

So even a fine for parking ban or other traffic violations, could be delivered without having “found” it under the windshield wiper. In these cases, the report must be notified within 90 days of the ascertainment, under penalty of nullity.

To take advantage of the reductions (e.g. 30% of the amount) in the payment within five days it is obviously necessary to wait for the notification of the report (and not from the date when the fact occurred).
